Description:
Nobel Prize laureate Toni Morrison’s spellbinding new novel is a Faulknerian symphony of passion and hatred, power and perversity, color and class that spans three generations of black women in a fading beach town. In life, Bill Cosey enjoyed the affections of many women, who would do almost anything to gain his favor. In death his hold on them may be even stronger. Wife, daughter, granddaughter, employee, mistress: As Morrison’s protagonists stake their furious claim on Cosey’s memory and estate, using everything from intrigue to outright violence, she creates a work that is shrewd, funny, erotic, and heartwrenching.

I’m in daily appreciation for the themes behind Love, although I’m not too crazy about the actual story. Which shocks me because the more I got to know about the Cosey family, Junior, and “L.” I really began to delve into their individual histories as a gateway to understanding how these women could sacrifice their lives in the name of Billy Cosey? A man who was too proud too marry his “whore” although capable of publicly molesting and marrying a child? And yet the women in his life who navigated both his personal and professional realm, love him no less and defend him to the end. A question that points back to the title of the novel and most poignantly the danger of a women’s love. Where we find beautiful, intelligent, and multi-faceted women loyal to a dangerous self-serving man? Women who can name the ever-ending and deep evils of a man, but don’t feel comfortable calling him such? Although when speaking of “Celestial” influence of men via her sexuality, or Heed’s WANT to be rid of poverty by any mean’s necessary, they are quickly deemed whores or self-serving opportunist, never being given the same hesitation or consideration as their god, Bill Cosey. That speaks to a moment in the text where Ms. Morrison states, “now, exhausted, drifting toward a maybe permanent sleep, they don’t speak of the birth of sin.” A moment that still points the blind eye given to the circumstances crafted by Bill Cosey. A man, who did awful, cruel, unexplainable things to the women who sacrificed their lives for him. Does that not deserve it’s rightful title? One that doesn’t fall back on “a man being a man”? I could go on, but I would continue with more statements that lead to more questions about the women in this story and their inability to authentically love. Women who didn’t every truly recognize and cherish the love of each other which was really all they had. When instead they rather love the shell of a man dressed in important clothing? The story is frustrating, and the end too soon. Although I’d argue it’s a text geared to confronting women and wondering why they’re love is not enough? Why they must ignore the strong spiritual ties of their own love that has kept them together despite all their abilities to leave one another. Rather than hold tight to a phantom dream of a man who wasn’t capable of love himself. I’m still torn if I would recommend the book. Although I can’t deny that the text does move the reader to a deeper questioning of love and what it means to women.
